

Germany

Surprised

France Has a Fighting Navy That Is Ready.

One of the most unpleasant surprises the jingoes of Germany have had for years was the fact revealed by the recent French naval review at Toulon that thanks to the wonderful activity of M. Delcasse, the French navy is ready for war at a moment's notice, and that even without the hoped-for assistance of England, France would be able to keep open all the important ports of the country.

With the assurance of the English Prime Minister, that France could rely on England in case of a German attack, the now famous "coup d'Agadir" appears to everybody here to have been the most stupid attempt of bluff that German diplomacy has ever tried. And having exhausted their vocabulary in abusing England, nearly all the newspapers of the country are now telling the government in plain words that it never had the faintest chance of success.

The attitude of the German people is pacificatory. First of all the socialists do not want war and, thanks to the influence among the young men of the country, the government would have found serious difficulty in mobilizing an army for a war in which Germany was the aggressor.

Secondly, Germany is not loved in Europe and, in case of a war, she would not dare withdraw her troops from the Russian and Austrian frontier, nor even from the German Polish provinces. Even Belgium at the informal request of France put her formidable fortresses at Liege, Namur and Ostende in a state of active defense and made every preparation for the reception of a British fleet in the event of an outbreak of hostilities.

When it is remembered that the Germans have lost by depreciation in stocks on the Berlin Bourse since the "Panther" was sent to Agadir, more money than the profits of German traders in Morocco in twenty years, it is small wonder that the government feels exceedingly uncomfortable and realizes that even as an attempt to influence the coming elections, the Morocco venture has been an absolute and crushing failure.

Pretty Wedding

Miss Anna Rose Goes to Massachusetts To Live.

The wedding of Miss Anna Rose, and Captain Ernest Anderson, which took place at the Hotel Courtland, last week was unprecedented for beauty and elaborateness. The nuptials were solemnized in a large bow window, in the reception room. This recess, by means of rare palms, maidenhair ferns and bride's roses, had been converted into a floral bower. The color scheme for the wedding was white and green, the interior of the hotel was decorated in these colors, with the exception of one room, where the bride's cake was cut. The apartment was adorned with Beauty roses and was lighted by candles, shaded with rose pink shades. The Hotel Courtland would make a beautiful setting for any entertainment, with its large rooms and artistic furnishing. The decorations were in the artistic and competent hands of Mrs. Charles Chillingworth, wife of Senator Chillingworth and Mrs. Lorenzen, wife of Captain Lorenzen, who are both warm personal friends of the bride. Bride's roses and white asters were used almost exclusively in the adornment of the hotel, combined with maile, that had been sent over from Hawaii by a brother of the bride. The Hawaiian maile, resembles somewhat the smilax vine, but is even more beautiful for decorative purposes and is very fragrant. The large archways between the reception room, drawing room and dining room, were curtained with the maile interspersed with bride's roses and was looped with streamers of white satin ribbon. The windows were also draped with maile, producing a canopy effect that was very effective, with touches of the white roses, that relieved the monotony of the green. From the four corners of the large reception room and ball room the Hawaiian smilax was festooned, the strands being gracefully caught by bowknots of white tulle, to the chandeliers. Promptly at eight o'clock the bride and her attendants appeared, wending their way down the central staircase, that was banked with white asters and maiden hair ferns. The balustrade had been completely hidden by these ferns. Mrs. Caroline Robinson and Mrs. Edward Tenney put their conservatories—which are among the most beautiful in town—at the disposal of the decorators and the result was wonderful. The rare palms and hundreds of potted maiden hair, so cleverly utilized, resulted in such a wonderful effect, that the spectacle was more of a woodland scene, and the environment was such that can only be witnessed in the tropics, where the tropical verdure is so luxuriant. The bride looked stately and beautiful in her wedding gown of white Baby Irish crochet, over brocade satin. The conventional wedding veil was worn of white illusion, caught with sprays of natural orange blossoms. The only jewels worn was a large diamond sunburst, that was a gift of the groom.
